Letter From Arkansas.

CLIO, ARK., June 18, 1905.
Ed. Register.—In last week's Commoner Mr. Bryan has a very interesting article entitled "The Next Awakening." One sentence of which reads as follows: "And who can distinguish a moral difference between the conduct of the man who, comfortably seated in a richly furnished office, exacts an unreasonable price for a necessary of life merely because monopoly enables him to extort the price, and the conduct of the brigand who, at the muzzle of a revolver, demands your money or your life?" If Mr. Bryan had added to this list the man who, because of the glut in the labor market that enables him to do so, employs men at starvation wages, the list would have been complete. The next awakening will put him there and treat him in much the same way that the brigand is now treated, except the corporal punishment. The "swag" will be taken from him, and since it would be impossible to restore it to those from whom it was taken, it will be given to society or to the general public for public use. Then we will have the great co-operative commonwealth and all men will indeed be born equal and endowed with equal opportunities.

New York City will no longer have ten thousand children going to school hungry; and there will no longer be an annual sacrifice of 450,000 babies on the altar of greed. There will then be no strikes, no lockouts, no enforced idleness, for the next awakening is going to be the awakening of labor to the sense of its wrongs and its power to right them. Let us pray that this great awakening may not be delayed until it is too late to do it peacefully.

Yes, the next awakening is now upon us; thousands, yes, millions, of people now see the approaching dawn, when there shall be no more wars; when the "sword shall be made into plowshares" and all men shall really be free and equal.

F. P. HILBURN.

That Tired Feeling.

If you are languid, depressed and incapable for work, it indicates that your liver is out of order. Herbine will assist nature to throw off headaches, rheumatism and ailments akin to nervousness and restore the energies and vitality of sound and perfect health. J. J. Hubbard, Temple, Texas, writes, March 22, 1902: "I have used Herbine for the past two years. It has done me more good than all the doctors. When I feel bad and have that tired feeling, I take a dose of Herbine. It is the best medicine ever made for chills and fever." 50c a bottle. Sold by Arcadia Valley Drug Co.

Letter From Texas.

PENIEL, TEX., June 14, 1905.
Ed. Register.—For some time I have thought of sending a few lines. I have received several inquiries since coming here in regard to this section. As to farming, there is an abundance of cotton, wheat, corn and oats. Oats were out about the first of this month; corn is in silk and tassel, and wheat looks fine. I don't know if cotton looks well or not, never before having seen it grow. There are great fields of cotton and great numbers of both white and colored folks chopping it; they use a hoe about nine inches wide, and the average chopper gets about $1.50 per day. Everything is late here on account of so much rain, although we need rain very badly now. There is no timber close to us, except along the river; this is strictly a farming country; black land and very productive. If the people could or would work hard here there is no telling the limit of crops that could be raised, but it is awful hot, and I have talked to several Missouri people who say the climate is so warm one soon becomes sluggish and loses energy.

It is very warm to-day, although we generally have a good breeze from the south. The people in the South are the most friendly people I ever met. Crops are laid by now, or a great many are done until cotton picking time, and people are starting out visiting. A wagon is well covered, and sometimes two or three, and it reminds me of the picture of Noah's Ark. They load in all the children and what cooking utensils are necessary to use on their journey, which is often one and two hundred miles. Now this is living, for everything is arranged neat in the wagon, and a trunk of good clothes handy. Many times these people come across a brush arbor or a text, or a tabernacle where a big camp meeting is going on and many souls being saved and sanctified. At once they pitch camp and take in the meeting, and shout and pray and sing. Yes, people down here do enjoy religion the old-fashioned way, go visiting and take the dogs, catch possums and roast sweet 'taters, and everybody enjoys it. They get down a big family bible and read a chapter and pray for all the preachers and foreign missionaries, camp meetings and their neighbors for fifty miles around, for every darky in the South and all the men and boys who are in sin, and the girls down in the slums. Now everybody is not a Christian; but I am only telling of the religion that keeps people happy and makes others happy. Even the cowboys when riding by a lady will tip their hats and slacken the speed of their ponies. You don't see every little town with a saloon. If a man is caught carrying a pistol or a pair of knucks, he gets "fixed a plenty." I am bound to say that Texas has better laws, or they are enforced better, I don't know which, than Missouri. If two men fight they both get the same penalty. There is better order kept on the streets of Greenville, Tex., every first Monday—which is trading day—than is kept at any picnic I ever saw at home. And trading day means all the rough characters for miles around. They bring in everything from a pig to a threshing machine to trade or sell. I have seen only one drunk man since I landed in Texas. He was in Greenville. We are two miles from the public square of Greenville. I suppose there is plenty of wickedness going on; in fact I know there is. My wife and I are doing regular jail work at Greenville every Sunday afternoon. Sometimes there are six or eight of us, and we read the bible and pray and sing to the men and take them religious papers to read. Sometimes I try to preach to them and they appreciate it very much. I have seen ten saved since we were put on the work. Now comes the thought of the Iron county jail and its inmates. Christian friends, you who profess to love and serve God have work to do. If people have religion, they ought to have enough to pray for men who are behind the bars; and not wait till boys grow up and steal and murder and do everything else the devil wants done. When I saw John Polk's picture in the REGISTER, and also of Will and Arthur Spagh, and read of the awful murder, I thought of other boys who are coming to the same fate as Will and Arthur, unless they are stopped in some way. Good promises and swear-off won't go. Unless Jesus' blood cleanses you there is a hell waiting you, which is much worse than jails. We can't do without jails and penitentiaries; they are the only places of safe keeping for desperate characters. The Devil has no place for sinners only hell. I have entirely quit business with the Devil, and I hope to get a chance to tell every sinner in Iron county, and many other places, just how Jesus can save them from all sins. I will run this letter into religion, I expect, but, Bro. Ake, I won't hurt the REGISTER, and I am sure you are glad to see any one accept Jesus as their Savior and prepare to live better and die better.

It was very sad news for me to hear of Bro. James Pate, of Des Arc, being drowned. Bro. Jim was a consecrated man to God; he was sanctified in the Methodist Church last January. We bade him good-bye before we came here. I am sure he is one saint I will know in heaven. His wife has our prayers and tears in sympathy. Saved and Sanctified up to date, W. W. STROTHER.
